What are the UNM Health Policy Doctoral Fellowships?

The UNM Health Policy Doctoral fellowship is a prestigious doctoral fellowship program for Ph.D. students with educational and research interests that include health and health policy analysis and research. The University of New Mexico seeks to increase the participation of underrepresented groups (e.g., Hispanic, Native American, Black, etc.) in the nation in the development, implementation, and analysis of health policy. At the core of the University's mission is the education of a new generation of leaders in health and health policy studies, leaders whose diversity reflects the full diversity of the U.S. population.

As a UNM Health Policy Doctoral Fellow, you will:

- Become a leader in health policy analysis and research for underrepresented communities
- Have access to conference travel, office space, and statistical and writing support
- Receive up to 4 years of funding, including tuition, health insurance and up to a $24,000 annual RAship*
- Have opportunities to participate in collaboration between social scientists and health professionals

Who Is Eligible?

Students who are applying to, or who are currently enrolled in a Ph.D. program in a social science department at UNM are eligible for this award. Priority is given to applicants from Economics, Political Science and Sociology. You may not need an M.A. before applying to the Ph.D. Program. In many cases you can apply with a B.A. and you will earn an M.A. enroute to earning the Ph.D. Applicants who are Ph.D. candidates and who are no longer taking classes in their program are eligible for funding for up to two years of total funding. The fellowship is open to all United States residents and citizens.
